

Buying an Energy-Efficient Refrigerator

Jennifer Barker

The Kenmore #74982 (shown) and #74282 models provide ample space and excellent energy values.

In most households, refrigerators consume more energy than any other use except heating, air conditioning, and hot water. For on-grid utility customers looking to save energy on refrigeration, the choice is pretty straightforward. New Energy Star refrigerators provide energy savings by using high-efficiency compressors, improved insulation, and more precise temperature and defrost mechanisms that improve energy efficiency.

Today's Energy Star models use about half the energy of refrigerators manufactured before 1993, about 40 percent less energy than conventional models sold in 2001, and at least 15 percent less energy than required by current federal standards. Replacing a 15-year-old refrigerator with a new Energy Star model can save enough energy over the course of a year to light the average household for more than four-and-a-half months, and can eliminate more than 400 pounds (180 kg) of pollution each year.

Buying an efficient refrigerator should be as easy as 1-2-3. First, do your homework. Next, do some "pres shopping." Then bring home a refrigerator that will serve your needs, save pounds of pollution every year, and keep dollars in your pocket instead of the utility's.

Space Has Value

Refrigerator space can be given a specific value in dollars per cubic foot of chilled space per year. The comparison table in this article of selected models
