

FOREWORD

This workshop manual has been compiled for use in conjunction with normal workshop practice. Mention of certain accepted practices therefore, has been purposely omitted in order to avoid repetition.

Reference to removing joints and cleaning off joint faces has to a great extent been omitted from the text, it being understood that this will be carried out where appropriate.

Similarly, it is understood that in reassembly and inspection, all parts are to be thoroughly cleaned and where greases, oils and sludge are to be removed.

It follows that any spare parts of high precision components, e.g., fuel injection equipment, exposed by dismantling, will be treated off until reassembled, to prevent the ingress of foreign matter.

When set screws or studs are fitted into holes which are tapped through into the inside of the engine, a suitable sealant must be used on the threads.

Throughout this manual, whenever the "left" or "right" hand side of the engine is referred to, it is that side of the engine as viewed from the flywheel end.

The engine number is stamped on the fuel pump mounting flange as shown in the above illustration.

Three systems of engine numbering have been used.

On very early engines the serial number consisted of seven digits as follows:—

Engine Type	Typical Engine Number
4.108	7000000
4.107	7100000
4.99	7200000

Identification on these engines can be identified by observing the first two figures of the engine number which remain constant depending on engine type.

With later engines, the number consisted of figures and letters:—

Engine Type	Typical Engine Number
4.108	108J201
4.107	107J201
4.99	99J201

The first figures represent the capacity of the engine in cubic inches, the letter "J" signifies that the engine was built in the United Kingdom and the last group of figures comprises the engine serial number.

On current engines, the number can consist of up to fifteen letters and figures, a typical number being 102715J2010290.
