

Personal Statement

"If you want a happy life, tie it to a goal, not to people or things."

—Albert Einstein

Although in my heart, I know that in order to be happy, I have to learn how to please myself before others. It's hard because I value my family and friends' opinions and I know their advice and guidance are benefits for me. Without the help of my family and friends, I wouldn't be able to be where I am today. They influenced me in many different ways to help me discover my interests. Identifying my fascinations in life is the key to my future, among with other skills that I need to build. They gave me the power to have determination and confidence of being who I am. I am here today at Portland State University to open a new door to my future, to accomplish my goal of graduating from here with a Business degree.

Throughout my whole life, I have always been indecisive and a pessimist. Growing up in an environment where my parents had high expectations intimidated me. I didn't have confidence in myself or my future, believing that I will be a failure. My parents sacrificed a lot to give us the opportunity to get a higher education because they never got the chance. Their dream for us to have a better education for a successful career was their motivation for their sacrifices. I don't want to disappoint them and not take advantage of an opportunity that has been given because I know many people who strive for this chance.
