psychopathology or vision in humans has been complemented by evidence elucidating molecular gene and hormonal mechanisms in animals. It has been proposed that sensitive periods can be both opened and closed by specific experience and that there are multiple overlapping sensitive periods that occur throughout development as functions come on line. It is also likely that experience dependent behavioral or brain plasticity accrued during one sensitive period can serve as a scaffold on which later experience and plasticity can build. Based on current knowledge there are a number of broad questions and challenges to be addressed in this domain. These include generating new information about the neurobiological mediators of structural and functional changes, proposing models of brain development that will better predict when sensitive periods should occur and what functions are implicated, investigation of the interaction between experience during a sensitive period and pre-existing individual differences, and the relationship between experience during a sensitive period and ongoing experience. The goal of this Research Topic is to bring together scientists in different fields whose work addresses these issues including animal and human developmental neuroscience, language and cognitive development, education, developmental psychopathology, and sensory neuroscience.
