Stars

Lights in the Sky

For years, mankind has looked to the heavens and wondered at the lights in the sky. Ancient people believed they could see shapes among the stars. They identified both animals and people, and made their own tales. These chance alignments of the stars are known as constellations. Today, the 88 constellations are used by astronomers to organize the night sky and to identify the locations of the stars.

Stars are the most plentiful objects in the visible universe. They provide the light and energy that fuels a wide universe. They also provide the thermal energy that warms the earth and the light that allows us to see. The Sun provides energy for nearly every living thing on Earth. It also warms our planet's surface to create a virtual oasis in the universe of space. A star's brightness is known as its magnitude. Astronomers rate the magnitude of a star with a scale that gives brighter stars a low number and dim stars a higher number. Each whole number on the scale is 2.5 times dimmer than the previous number. The brightest star in the night sky is Sirius, with a magnitude of -1.46. It is about 10 times brighter than a star with a magnitude of zero. Stars with a magnitude of 1 or more are too dim to see with the naked eye. Stars are identified by their color, which indicates their temperature. They are divided into what are known as spectral classes. These classes are O, B, A, F, G, K, and M. Class O stars are the hottest and are blue in color. The coolest stars are the red or class M and are red in color.

Spectral Class: Types for Stars

Spectral Class	Color
O	Blue
B	Blue-White
A	White
F	Yellow-White
G	Yellow
K	Orange
M	Red

Contrary to popular belief, stars do not actually burn. This phenomenon is a result of atmospheric interference. The effect is similar to what takes place on a hot summer day when you look across hot pavement or a parking lot. The rising air causes images to waver. This is what causes the twinkling effect in stars. The closer a star is to the eye, the more it will twinkle because its light must pass through more of the atmosphere.
