Quitting Certainties Michael G. Titelbaum, 2012-12-20 Michael G Titelbaum presents a new Bayesian framework for modeling rational degrees of belief called the Certainty Loss Framework Subjective Bayesianism is epistemologists standard theory of how individuals should change their degrees of belief over time But despite the theory s power it is widely recognized to fail for situations agents face every day cases in which agents forget information or in which they assign degrees of belief to self locating claims Quitting Certainties argues that these failures stem from a common source the inability of Conditionalization Bayesianism s traditional updating rule to model claims going from certainty at an earlier time to less than certainty later on It then presents a new Bayesian updating framework that accurately represents rational requirements on agents who undergo certainty loss Titelbaum develops this new framework from the ground up assuming little technical background on the part of his reader He interprets Bayesian theories as formal models of rational requirements leading him to discuss both the elements that go into a formal model and the general principles that link formal systems to norms By reinterpreting Bayesian methodology and altering the theory s updating rules Titelbaum is able to respond to a host of challenges to Bayesianism both old and new These responses lead in turn to deeper questions about commitment consistency and the nature of information Quitting Certainties presents the first systematic comprehensive Bayesian framework unifying the treatment of memory loss and context sensitivity It develops this framework motivates it compares it to alternatives then applies it to cases in epistemology decision theory the theory of identity and the philosophy of quantum mechanics
