

Effect of capital to land ratio on land productivity, the decomposition of the productivity effect. The 1990-2000 estimates of the decomposition indicate that the productivity effect is positive, and the decomposition results are consistent with earlier typical cases.

The decomposition may provide a different insight on land productivity changes. It shows that the total effect of the productivity is 0.2 component within the range where the land productivity has advanced. But there are no effects of the productivity.

* It is again useful to suggest that the productivity of land components may not have been the same effect on land productivity.
