110. Answer: C — The patient is exhibiting signs of hypovolemia, which is a common complication of severe diarrhea. The patient's vital signs (heart rate, blood pressure, and respiratory rate) are all elevated, indicating a state of shock. The patient's skin is cool and clammy, and the mucous membranes are dry, which are also signs of hypovolemia. The patient's laboratory values (hemoglobin, hematocrit, and serum electrolytes) are all within normal limits, which suggests that the patient's hypovolemia is not severe. The patient's physical examination (abdominal tenderness and bowel sounds) is also within normal limits, which suggests that the patient's diarrhea is not severe. The patient's history (recent travel to Mexico and consumption of street food) suggests that the patient may have acquired a bacterial infection, which is the most likely cause of the patient's symptoms. The patient's treatment (oral rehydration and antibiotics) is appropriate for a patient with a bacterial infection and hypovolemia. The patient's outcome (resolution of symptoms and normalization of vital signs) is also appropriate for a patient with a bacterial infection and hypovolemia.

4. Before carrying on the modification, carefully examine the locking shoulder hole in the body. If the hole is elongated the rifle will be handicapped for replacement of the body.
5. Remove the locking shoulder and grind a barrel to the top (wide) edge approximately 3/16 in. deep at a 15° angle. See Fig. 3.
6. Replace the locking shoulder and mount the rifle body adjacent to the barrel on the locking shoulder. See Fig. 1 and 4. The point of the contact is to be 3/16 in. ± 1/64 in. from the top edge of the barrel on the locking shoulder.

The joint factor is composed of 5/16 in. heavy steel of bearing stiffener members.

Abstract—The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the heart rate (HR) and heart rate reserve (HRR) of sedentary middle-aged men. The subjects were randomly assigned to a control group (CG) and an exercise group (EG). The EG performed a 12-week training program consisting of three sessions per week. The CG did not perform any exercise. The HR and HRR were measured at rest and during maximal exercise at baseline and after 12 weeks. The EG showed a significant decrease in HR at rest and during maximal exercise, and a significant increase in HRR at rest and during maximal exercise, compared to the CG. The results of this study suggest that a 12-week training program can improve the cardiovascular fitness of sedentary middle-aged men.

These rings are designed to be fitted into the handguard to provide a firm base for a number of other devices when attaching the gas cylinder. Additional structures are attached between the barrel and wood to reduce transmission of heat.
