

Teen Smoking

Madison Robinson

In recent years the amount of teens that smoke has sky rocketed. Most of these teens started smoking to improve their self image. They are doing it anywhere that parental supervision is not present. By smoking these teens can get cancer or lung disease. These teens need to know that it doesn't make them look cool.

One solution could be to reduce the public image of smoking. Ads in magazines are constantly promoting smoking. When teens read these magazines they get a message telling them that smoking is cool. If we could stop the ads then teens would no longer get the message and it would no longer appeal to their self image. Names of cigarettes are constantly printed on all types of clothing apparel wearing this clothing promotes cigarettes and appeals to the teen age eye. All teenagers want the latest clothes so if we stop the making of this apparel then teenagers could stop seeing this as the latest fashion and stop wanting to wear it. Most all teenagers watch some form of a movie or television show. Some teens have idols that they look up to and if their idol smokes in a movie the teen thinks they should do it also. If we ban smoking on TV and movies then kids won't want to smoke because they see the actors doing it. As you can see there are many benefits to reducing cigarette advertising.

Another solution would be to increase the education about smoking. After school programs that teach about smoking should be held. Teens would then know what they are putting in their mouth when they pick up a cigarette. It would also teach them about all the different diseases that you can get from smoking. Also a meeting of parents and students should be called. This could let parents know what they are doing to their kids when they buy cigarettes for them. After this happened parents might not buy anymore cigarettes for their kids because they care about their child's health. Since teens think that smoking makes them look cool self esteem classes should be held. These classes would boost the self esteem of the teens that choose to smoke. Teens would then find out that smoking isn't cool and doesn't boost their self esteem. As you can see education is a good solution to reduce teen smoking.

Next, I think that fighting the media and reducing ads would be the more effective solution. Since TV's are available all over the world this solution would have a larger effect. This global effect could impact teens all over the world than one class in one state. Millions of teens watch TV therefore the effect would be much greater. This solution is also a lot
