

UCAS Personal Statement Example

When I was six, my mother and I were trapped on a bridge for four hours because there was a part that had caved in. Unfortunately, several hundred meters ahead of us, a car had plunged into the waters below. Of course there were many reasons given for the bridge collapse, from faulty construction to lack of funding. However, it ignited in me a very persistent curiosity: how could I build a more durable, more efficient bridge structure that also comprised a built-in failure sensor?

My fascination with engineering began at that moment, and ever since, I have pursued it steadily. I have entered over twenty competitions for young engineers, and have won eleven first place prizes in bridge modeling. I even started an engineering club at my school to be able to share my interest with others. The club now has over twenty members and includes not only structural engineering, but also the fields of computer and electrical engineering as well. It has been a great experience for me to experience other aspects of engineering, and I hope to be able to integrate these different knowledge bases into my future works.

A university degree is crucial to me in my pursuit of a career as a structural engineer. Not only do I have to master many mathematical, physical, and economic concepts, but I also have to be able to put these skills to practical use. I expect that in my time in college, I will learn how to memorize and apply knowledge. The time I spend in college will help me hone an innovative mind that is able to respond to crisis situations with calm determination. I plan to create safer structures that not only last longer, but that utilize the latest technology to implement an early detection system for possible failures.
