

There were too many of them. A multitude of piranhas disguised as sweet, nerdy little kids who had willingly embraced the stigma of the math club. When I entered their classroom as a volunteer math club teacher, I was afraid to turn my back. Surely, they could sense my fear and would eagerly prey upon it. Yet that day, the love of math opened new doors in my life. My love of math somehow transformed my fear into a pinpoint, calm focus. More importantly, the kids' love of math, and their consequent enthusiasm and open curiosity, pried open my closed shells and helped me adjust in a positive way.

I have always done things my own way in solitude without much consideration for the interests of others, unless I had to consider them. I would simply discard the potential influences of others in favor of my own. Up until my junior year in high school, I was able to stay clammed up and secure in my shells of isolation.

Yet I always excelled – and loved – math. My math teacher asked me one day whether I would like to volunteer in a new program. The goal of the program was to bring advanced math concepts to elementary math club members who really wanted to learn math ahead of the standard school curriculum. While I certainly could relate to (and admire) that desire, my shells prevented me from teaching groups in an open setting. But I needed the volunteer hours for my own purposes, so I agreed to volunteer on the condition that I would only teach individual students.

Of course, things did not work out the way I planned; soon enough, I was forced to participate as a supervising teacher to receive volunteer credits. I prepared reluctantly while my anxiety built up as the first day of class approached. Before I knew it, I had to go in and face my fears.

Entering the classroom, I was overwhelmed by the size of the class. How could this many fourth and fifth graders already like math this much? A growing sense of humiliation dominated my mind. All I could do was to turn my exposed back to them and begin writing problems on the whiteboard. It took even more effort to turn back around into their patient, oppressive silence.

But when I did turn, I found that my explanations and math itself would do all of the work. Nervousness subsided, and confidence grew. My lesson progressed quickly and smoothly, with no regard to errors. I had finally given over to something that allowed me to be open, unguarded and sociable than I had ever been.

I suspected that my glory would end once I finished the lesson. But how glad I was to be completely wrong! After I finished my lecture, I naturally turned silent, pondering about new teaching strategies and new topics for future lessons. But the kids would not let me. They told me politely that they thought the lesson was interesting – their deferential, candid gratitude was far
