1. Understand the evolution and key business benefits of enterprise systems.
2. Understand the role of enterprise systems in supporting business processes.
3. Understand the different categories of data in SAP ERP.
4. Understand options for reporting.

Chapter Outline and Teaching Suggestions

1. Enterprise Systems
  - a. Architecture of Enterprise Systems
    - i. Client-Server Architecture
    - ii. Service-Oriented Architecture
  - b. Enterprise Resource Planning (ERP) Systems
  - c. Application Platforms

Explain enterprise systems in terms of their architecture, ERP systems, and application platforms. Point out that modern ES have either a three-tier client-server architecture or a service-oriented architecture, both of which have benefits and drawbacks. Students must understand that the client-server architecture has three layers as well as the function of each layer. Consider using a Web browser or SAP GUI as an aid in presenting an example. Figure 2-1 can also assist you.

Explain that service-oriented architecture provides the capability of connecting many different client-server systems together using a Web browser and new technologies (Web services). An example is a company that connects its system with a shipping company's system so that it can access shipping rates in real time.

Explain that the primary focus of an ERP system is the internal operations of a company; for example, human resources and sales and marketing. Figure 2-2 can be useful in explaining the ERP intra-company processes and the integration of functional and cross-functional business processes.
