

Last Screen of the Wizard Builder: Completing the Wizard, with Title

Implementing the Wizard Concept

The wizard sets up its structure in an internal table and passes it on to the dispatcher module, which controls the course of the Wizard Framework. Depending on the user input, the dispatcher module calls either the next or the previous screen (or exits the wizard). Dispatcher modules have been implemented as callback FORM routines, which themselves call a Wizard Framework module to display the screen. Each wizard screen contains a roadmap, descriptive text, and navigation buttons. This layout is standardized and is supplied by the Wizard Framework. The wizard developer only has to implement the dialogs as subscreens.

Using the Wizard Builder

New wizards are created with the Wizard Builder (transaction SBPT_WB). This tool generates a wizard that is already executable, but does not yet contain any application-specific interactions or dialogs. The wizard developer has to "fill in" the empty areas, like the documentation and the screens. This "filling in" is also supported by the Wizard Builder. Although the Wizard Builder has strictly pre-defined interaction and design options, please be sure to follow the guidelines in the Wizard Style Guide as well.
