

Chapter 5

Microeconomics and Macroeconomics

Microeconomics is the study of the behaviour and decisions of households and firms, and the performance of individual markets.

- It deals with prices and production in single markets and interaction between different markets.
- The microeconomic decisions add up to form the macroeconomic picture.
- Eg. studying the effect of a price change on the demand for a good, changes in wages of pilots, change in output of car industry.

Macroeconomics is the study of an entire economy, as a whole.

- It includes topics such as the change in the number of people employed in the economy and changes in the country's output.
- Eg. the unemployment level, Gross domestic product, inflation rate.

Example of correlation between microeconomy and macroeconomy

- A reduction in the output of the car industry (microeconomics) may result in a rise in the country's unemployment rate (macroeconomics)
- A decision by the government (macroeconomics) to cut income tax rates may result in households buying more cars (microeconomics)

Economic agents those who undertake economic activities and make economic decisions. They are households, firms and the government.

Microeconomics and Behavior Robert H. Frank, 1991 Robert Frank's Microeconomics and Behavior covers the essential topics of microeconomics while exploring the relationship between economics analysis and human behavior. The book's clear narrative appeals to students and its numerous examples help students develop economic intuition. This book introduces modern topics not often found in intermediate textbooks. Its focus throughout is to develop a student's capacity to think like an economist. Microeconomics & Sapling Learning Single-course Homework-only for Principles of
