

Thymine is used by animal cells primarily for the synthesis of DNA. A group of sea urchin eggs was fertilized in sea water containing radioactive thymine. Following fertilization, samples of embryos were removed at regular intervals and the radioactivity in the nucleic acid was measured in counts per minute. The results obtained are shown in the figure below.

16. The increase in radioactivity of the embryos with time probably results from
- (A) synthesis of new proteins by the developing embryos
  - (B) synthesis of radioactive thymine by the developing embryos
  - (C) oxidation of radioactive thymine
  - (D) incorporation of radioactive thymine in new cell membranes
  - (E) incorporation of radioactive thymine in new DNA during replication
