

STUDY GUIDE FOR THE SAT SUBJECT TEST IN BIOLOGY E/M

Bad news first: there's no one right way to study for a test. If you're looking for a surefire shortcut, there simply isn't one. The good news, however, is that if you're reading this, you're already on the right track—you're putting in the three key resources for successful study habits: time, energy, and focus. The following study guide features a few suggested ways to tackle the SAT Subject Test in Biology E/M, depending on whether the test is just around the corner (1 Week Cram) or if you've got more time to practice (7 Week Stretch).

Remember that these plans are simply suggestions; everybody learns in their own way and at their own pace. When choosing where to begin, use what you know about your own study habits. If cramming for a test hasn't been effective for you in the past, perhaps it's time to try spreading out your practice over a longer period of time. On the other hand, if you find yourself forgetting key material just before the test, you might want to try an intense refresher in the week leading up to the exam.

If you're not sure how best to prepare, we recommend using Practice Test 1 (pages 29–52) as a diagnostic, which means giving yourself enough time to mirror what will be allotted to you on test day, and then working in a quiet and uninterrupted environment. When you're done, check answers against the key on page 54. If you're happy with your results, you might just spend a week focusing on the specific section for which you had wrong answers. On the other hand, if you're struggling across the board, you may be best served by building up those content gaps over the course of a few months. Here are our recommendations.

1 Week Cram

The following schedule is an extremely abbreviated way of gaining maximum exposure to the course. It involves reinforcement over a limited amount of time, so you'll be touching on each bit of content four times—once when you skim the chapter to get a general sense of the ideas within, again when you read the summary to remind yourself of what you're expected to have learned, a third time when you test your knowledge against the drill questions, and finally when you mark key terms that you remain unfamiliar or uncomfortable with. If you have extra time on any given day, we recommend reading the portions of each content chapter that you feel least comfortable with.

Day 0, Sunday [2 hours]

Take Practice Test 1. Keep the results of the test in mind as you go through the next week, and slow down your skimming when you hit a section where you struggled.

Day 1, Monday [1 hour]

- Review Chapter 1, "Introduction."
- Familiarize yourself with the exam format and our test-taking strategies in Chapter 2, "The Exam Format, Question Types, and Strategies."
- Skim Chapter 3, "Molecules of Biology."

Day 2, Tuesday [1.5 hours]

- Review Key Terms (page 91) and Summary (page 93) for Chapter 3. Circle any terms you don't know.
- Complete Drills 1–5 (pages 69, 75, 78, 83, 90) in Chapter 3.
- Skim Chapter 4, "Cell Structure" and Chapter 5, "Cellular Respiration."
