Kortschak,T.N. Thiele Centre for Applied Mathematics in Natural Science,2012   Extending Complex Event Processing for Advanced Applications Di Wang,2013 Abstract Recently numerous emerging applications ranging from on line financial transactions RFID based supply chain management traffic monitoring to real time object monitoring generate high volume event streams To meet the needs of processing event data streams in real time Complex Event Processing technology CEP has been developed with the focus on detecting occurrences of particular composite patterns of events By analyzing and constructing several real world CEP applications we found that CEP needs to be extended with advanced services beyond detecting pattern queries We summarize these emerging needs in three orthogonal directions First for applications which require access to both streaming and stored data we need to provide a clear semantics and efficient schedulers in the face of concurrent access and failures Second when a CEP system is deployed in a sensitive environment such as health care we wish to mitigate possible privacy leaks Third when input events do not carry the identification of the object being monitored we need to infer the probabilistic identification of events before feed them to a CEP engine Therefore this dissertation discusses the construction of a framework for extending CEP to support these critical services First existing CEP technology is limited in its capability of reacting to opportunities and risks detected by pattern queries We propose to tackle this unsolved problem by embedding active rule support within the CEP engine The main challenge is to handle interactions between queries and reactions to queries in the high volume stream execution We hence introduce a novel stream oriented transactional model along with a family of stream transaction scheduling algorithms that ensure the correctness of concurrent stream execution And then we demonstrate the proposed technology by applying it to a real world healthcare system and evaluate the stream transaction scheduling algorithms extensively using real world workload Second we are the first to study the privacy implications of CEP systems Specifically we consider how to suppress events on a stream to reduce the disclosure of sensitive patterns while ensuring that nonsensitive patterns continue to be reported by the CEP engine We formally define the problem of utility maximizing event suppression for privacy preservation We then design a suite of real time solutions that eliminate private pattern matches while maximizing the overall utility Our first solution optimally solves the problem at the event type level The second solution at event instance level further optimizes the event type level solution by exploiting runtime event distributions using advanced pattern match cardinality estimation techniques Our experimental evaluation over both real world and synthetic event streams shows that our algorithms are effective in maximizing utility yet still efficient enough to offer near real time system responsiveness Third we observe that in many real world object monitoring applications where the CEP technology is adopted not all sensed events carry the identification of the object whose action they report on so called non ID ed events Such non ID ed events prevent us from performing object based analytics such as tracking alerting and pattern matching We propose a probabilistic inference framework to tackle this problem by inferring the missing object identification associated with an event Specifically as a foundation we design a time varying graphic model to capture correspondences between sensed events and objects Upon this model we elaborate how to adapt the state of the art Forward backward inference algorithm to continuously infer probabilistic identifications for non ID ed events More important we propose a suite of strategies for optimizing the performance of inference Our experimental results using large volume streams of a real world health care application demonstrate the accuracy efficiency and scalability of the proposed technology   Event Models for Recognition and Natural Language Description of Events in Real-world Image Sequences Bernd Neumann,Hans-Joachim Novak,1983   Report of the Event Tag Review and Recommendation Group ,2006 In order to facilitate access to the large volumes of data multiple petabytes per year which will be produced during data taking and Monte Carlo production at ATLAS work has proceeded on building a system of event level metadata to allow selections of a subset of events to use as input to an analysis This was included in the ATLAS Computing Model and was first studied and implemented by the Physics Analysis Tools group based on the decisions of the ESD AOD Task Force They used tools developed and supported by the CERN IT group and the ATLAS Database group During 2005 this structure was put through various tests and evaluations Also work by physicists on reconstruction and analysis led to an improved understanding of the requirements on the TAG This report addresses the effect of these new inputs on the previous work with regard to content and the infrastructure needed to support it   Composite Event Specification and Detection for Supporting Active Capability in an OODBMS S. Chakravarthy,University of Florida. College of Engineering,V. Krishnaprasad,Rome Laboratory (Griffiss Air Force Base, N.Y.),Z. Tamizuddin,S-K. Kim,FLORIDA UNIV GAINESVILLE COLL OF

ENGINEERING.,1995 This effort is a result of a jointly funded agreement between NAVY NCCOSC and USAF Rome Laboratory in the area of intelligent knowledge base systems During the last decade database management systems DBMSs have evolved considerably to meet the requirements of emerging applications One of those requirements is to represent real world situations as part of the database and to monitor and react to them automatically without use of application intervention Making a database system active entails not only developing an expressive event specification language with well defined semantics and algorithms for the detection of composite events but also an architecture for an event detector along with its implementation This report extends earlier work on event specification language and provides the semantics of composite events over a global event history or a global event log   Measurement of the Underlying Event Using Track-based Event Shapes in Z -> L + L - Events with ATLAS ,2014   Measuring the Masses: Guidelines for Publication of Case Reports on Mass Gatherings Haddon Rabb,2017 Introduction Delphi processResults Data elements were inconsistently reported within published case reports Categories of variables included event demographics descriptors of date time genre activity risks attendance and population demographics data related to climate and weather conditions composition and deployment of an onsite medical team highest level of care available onsite patient demographics patient presentations and measures of impact on the local health care system such as transfer to hospital rates Of note there was a high incidence of u201cmissingu201d variables that would be of central interest to researchers Discussion Approaches to standardizing the collection and reporting of data are often discussed in the health care literature The benefits of consistent structured data collection are well understood In the context of mass gathering event case reporting the time is ripe for the introduction of a guideline with accompanying guidance notes and dictionary The proposed guideline requires the input of subject matter experts in progress to enhances its relevance and uptake Conclusions This work is timely as there is ongoing work on improving an international event medicine registry and if the evolution of both proceeds in lock step there is a good chance that access to a rigorous data set will become a reality
