The SAT is a standardized test widely used for college admissions in the United States. It was first introduced in 1945, and its name and scoring have changed several times, being originally called the Scholastic Aptitude Test, then the Scholastic Assessment Test, then the SAT Reasoning Test, and now simply the SAT.

The SAT is owned and published by the College Board, a private, nonprofit organization in the United States. It is developed and administered on behalf of the College Board by the Educational Testing Service. The test is intended to assess a student's readiness for college.

The current SAT, introduced in 2016, takes 3 hours and 45 minutes to finish, and is at 1600 points (1400 for Japan, 1500 for outside of the United States), excluding late fees. Possible scores on the SAT range from 400 to 1600, combining test results from three 800-point sections: Mathematics, Critical Reading, and Writing. However, the SAT does not assess high school coursework. According to the College Board, the SAT does not test logic or abstract reasoning. Taking the SAT is a requirement for the ACT, as required for admission entry to many, but not all, universities in the United States.

On March 9, 2019, the College Board announced that a redesigned version of the SAT would be administered for the first time in 2016. The score will revert to the 1600-point scale, the order will be optional, and students will have 3 hours to take the exam plus 50 additional minutes to complete the essay.

Function

The SAT is typically taken by high school sophomores, juniors and seniors. The College Board states that SAT measures literary and writing skills that are needed for academic success in college. They state that the SAT assesses how well the test takers analyze and solve problems—skills they learned in school that they will need in college. Moreover, the test is administered under a tight time limit (supposedly to help produce a range of scores). This can cause brilliant students that are slow test takers to receive only average scores.

The College Board also states that any of the SAT in combination with high school grade point average (GPA) provides a better indicator of success in college than high school grades alone, as measured by college freshman GPA. Various studies conducted over the lifetime of the SAT show a statistically significant increase in correlation of high school grades and college freshman grades where the SAT is factored in. A large independent validity study on the SAT's ability to predict college freshman GPA was performed by the University of California. The results of their study showed how well various predictor variables could explain the variance in college freshman GPA. It found that independently high school GPA could explain 15.4% of the variance in college freshman GPA, SAT I (the Math and Verbal SAT sections) could explain 13.1% of the variance in college freshman GPA, and SAT II (also known as SAT subject tests, is the DC's new specifically Writing, Mathematics II, or EC, plus a third subject test of the student's choosing) could explain 16% of the variance in college freshman GPA. When high school GPA and the SAT I were combined, they explained 20.6% of the variance in college freshman GPA. When high school GPA and the SAT II were combined, they explained 21.2% of the variance in college freshman GPA. When high school GPA and the SAT I were combined, they explained 21.2% of the variance in college freshman GPA. When SAT I was added to the combination of high school GPA and SAT II, it added a 1% increase in explaining the variance in college freshman GPA for a total of 22.3%.

There are substantial differences in funding, curricula, grading, and difficulty among U.S. secondary schools due to U.S. federalism, local control, and the prevalence of private, distance, and home-schooled students. SAT (and ACT) exams are intended to supplement the secondary school record and help admission officers put local data—such as course work, grades, and class rank—in a national perspective.
