Science for All Peter J. Bowler,2009-10-15 Recent scholarship has revealed that pioneering Victorian scientists endeavored through voluminous writing to raise public interest in science and its implications But it has generally been assumed that once science became a profession around the turn of the century this new generation of scientists turned its collective back on public outreach Science for All debunks this apocryphal notion Peter J Bowler surveys the books serial works magazines and newspapers published between 1900 and the outbreak of World War II to show that practicing scientists were very active in writing about their work for a general readership Science for All argues that the social environment of early twentieth century Britain created a substantial market for science books and magazines aimed at those who had benefited from better secondary education but could not access higher learning Scientists found it easy and profitable to write for this audience Bowler reveals and because their work was seen as educational they faced no hostility from their peers But when admission to colleges and universities became more accessible in the 1960s this market diminished and professional scientists began to lose interest in writing at the nonspecialist level Eagerly anticipated by scholars of scientific engagement throughout the ages Science for All sheds light on our own era and the continuing tension between science and public understanding A Reader's Guide to Contemporary Literature William Swan Sonnenschein,1896 The Greenwood Dictionary of World History John J. Butt,2005-12-30 The Greenwood Dictionary of World History is an indispensable handy and easy to use A to Z first stop ready reference resource providing essential information on over 2 000 of the most studied and important people events places and ideas in world history from prehistoric to modern times from all regions and epochs Selection of entries which are truly global in their range was based on the guidelines and recommendations of organizations and agencies such as the National Council for History Education the National Center for History in the Schools the World History Association the College Board World History Advanced
