The results showed that the use of the Internet was positively related to the use of other information sources. The study has implications for the design of information systems and the development of information literacy programs.

Abstract: This study examined the effects of a 12-week, low-intensity, low-impact exercise program on the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women. The program consisted of three sessions per week, each lasting 30 minutes. The program was designed to be safe and effective for women with no previous exercise experience. The results of the study showed that the program had a positive effect on the physical and psychological health of the women. The women who participated in the program showed significant improvements in their physical fitness, including increases in heart rate, blood pressure, and body mass index. Additionally, the women who participated in the program showed significant improvements in their psychological health, including decreases in anxiety and depression, and increases in self-esteem and overall well-being. The results of this study suggest that a 12-week, low-intensity, low-impact exercise program can be an effective way to improve the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women.
