Its software is historically IBM mainframe based, although products are currently being migrated to Windows environments.

Princeton Softech uses a network of agents and distributors to provide additional geographical coverage and support to clients in 20 countries. Tarragon Software has exclusive distribution rights to Princeton Softech's products in the UK and Ireland. Tarragon is a Cambridgeshire-based software house which supplies software products to the IBM mainframe community.

Overview of tools

There are three separate tools marketed under the Year 2000 banner: Version Merger, Relational Tools and Ager 2000. Although the first two products were not originally designed specifically for use within Year 2000 and EMU projects, both are very relevant.

Version Merger

One of the major trends characterising Year 2000 conversion projects has been to use an offshore (usually Asian) provider to take away the source code, perform the remedial changes and return the code to the originator. When a company takes this path, it is impossible to keep the code being worked on offshore up to date with any changes made at home. These must be identified and consolidated on the return of the code. In addition, there is the risk that some of the offshore work will have introduced other changes, including deletions and line changes.

Version Merger is an ISPF based programming tool that runs on TSO or CAROSCOE. Its function is to merge together different versions of a software program which have for some reason diverged. This may have been caused by the need to undertake parallel developments (such as emergency fixes made to the live version of the application while it was undergoing Year 2000 or EMU conversion) or by the release of an updated applications package (e.g. a Year 2000 or EMU compliant version) by the vendor into a site which may have undertaken its own local tailoring of the package.

In both cases, the processing required to merge the versions is complex. Each of the updated versions needs to be compared with an original baseline to determine what changes have taken place. First, comparison between the two updated versions is undertaken, to ascertain what changes have occurred to each, then the two sets of changes need to be merged and reapplied to the original version. It is this problem of three way comparisons that Version Merger addresses.

Version Merger compares up to three versions of each module, and produces a report with the following comparison status shown for each version:

- all versions are the same - no consolidation is needed
- all versions are different - consolidation is required
