

The Audit Market

2.11 Questions, Exercises and Cases

2.2 Introduction

2-1. What areas that an auditor audits is the responsibility of management?

Management is not only responsible for the financial and internal control reports to investors, but also has the authority to determine the precise nature of the representations that go into those reports.

2.3 Theories on the Demand and Supply of Audit Services

2-2. What are the most important theories on the demand of audit services?

- The policeman theory focuses auditing on arithmetical accuracy and on prevention and detection of fraud.
- The lending credibility theory contends that the primary function of auditing is the addition of credibility to the financial statements.
- The moderator of claimant's theory holds that all those who contribute to the company's profit get the impression he or she receives a fair share of the company's income. By giving an opinion on the accuracy of the income statement, the auditor is seen as a 'moderator of the various interests represented in the amounts shown therein.
- The quasi-judicial theory regards the auditor as a judge in the financial information distribution process.
- The theory of inspired confidence addresses both the demand and the supply of audit services. According to Limperg, the demand for audit services is the direct consequence of the participation of outside stakeholders (third parties) in the company. These stakeholders demand accountability from the management which an audit of management information. With regard to the level of audit, the auditor should execute his or her job in such a way, that the expectations of a 'reasonable outsider' are not put to shame.
- In the agency theory, a company is viewed as the result of more or less formal 'contracts', in which several groups make some kind of contribution to the company, given a certain 'price'. Company management is seen as the 'agent', trying to obtain contributions from 'principals' such as bankers, stockholders and employees.

2-3. Give a brief description of the agency theory as applied to both the demand and the supply of audit services.

In the agency theory, the auditor will make a trade-off between:

- The probability of detecting errors, measured by the costs of an extra hour of work by audit personnel.
- Auditor independence, measured by the loss likely to be incurred by the auditor as a result of losing a client following the qualification of the auditor's report.
