Explanations

1. Most gills are internal and require water to be drawn into the body for oxygen exchange to occur. However, some insects and some amphibians have external gills. These structures stick into the water and absorb oxygen from it.
2. After empty blood with no oxygen returns from the body, it moves through the right atrium and right ventricle of the heart and is pumped through the pulmonary artery to the lung. In the lung, the pulmonary artery divides into small capillaries. Here, small blood vessels pass next to the air sacs of the lung, and gases are exchanged across a thin membrane. Oxygen crosses the membrane into the blood, while carbon dioxide leaves the blood through this same membrane.
