

A) Read the first two chapters of Withgott and Brennan: Essential Environment textbook.

- Chapter 1

1) What are 3 things you learned?

- Three things I learned includes that our environment comprises of all the living and nonliving things around us with which we interact, fossil fuels such as oil, coal, and natural gases are forms of nonrenewable energy sources, and that sustainable development means the use of resources in a manner that satisfies our current needs but does not compromise the future availability of resources.

2) Who are Thomas Malthus, Paul Ehrlich, Garrett Hardin, John Muir and Aldo Leopold? and why they are significant to the study of environmental issues?

- Thomas Malthus was a British economist who claimed that unless population growth were controlled by laws or other social strictures the number of people would outgrow the available food supply until starvation, war, and disease arose and reduced population. Paul Ehrlich and his wife Anne Ehrlich also warned that our population was growing faster than our ability to produce and distribute food. They predicted that rapid population growth would unleash famine and conflict that would consume civilization by the end of the 20th century. Garrett Hardin disputed the economic theory that resources that are open to unregulated exploitation will eventually be depleted.

3) What is an ecological footprint?

- An ecological footprint expresses the environmental impact of an individual or population in terms of the cumulative amount of biologically productive land and water required to provide the raw materials the person or population consumes and to dispose of or recycle the waste the person or population produces.

4) Screenshot of your ecological footprint. What did you learn?

- After completing my ecological footprint, I learned that I use a lot more resources than I thought, so I might want to start conserving more of those resources such as water and food.

- Chapter 2

1) What are ecosystem services? Give

- Earth's ecosystems purify air and water, cycle nutrients, provide for the pollination of plants by animals, and receive and recycle waste generated by our economic activity. Such essential process, called ecosystem services, support the life that makes our economic activity possible.
