

TEACHING WITH INTENTION

changes everything

by Kristina Tereley

PICTURE THIS . . .

You're scrambling to get the final assessment finished for this round of Fountas & Pinnell Assessments. It feels like it's taking forever and all you want is to be done with it so you can get back to teaching.

You finally finish, sigh with relief, and turn the class list of reading levels over to your administrator. You place the final assessments on a filing cabinet and turn your attention back to teaching for the day.

I get it, I've been there. You feel rushed, pressured, and pulled from a million directions. You've got so many things going on in your classroom and just want to get the assessments over with as soon as they start.

But what if I told you . . .

That pile of paper holds the key to working smarter.

The data in those papers will accelerate student growth in countless ways.

And you will get there without extra effort.

As a literacy coach, I've been blessed to work with countless amazing teachers over the years. Every day I get to share simple techniques that make a radical difference in the classroom.

THESE SMALL INTENTIONAL SHIFTS HAVE A PROFOUND IMPACT ON STUDENT GROWTH.

And, at a time when more is expected from you than ever, it's essential to have techniques that work and are easy to implement — allowing you to operate from a place of peace rather than one of stress and chaos.

SO HOW DO YOU GET THERE? KEEP READING . . .
