

Are you're getting observed...

Are your classroom observations not as meaningful, then we have frequently asked questions about CLASS observations, what they measure, and how the data can be used.

Q: Why is CLASS?

A: The Classroom Assessment Scoring System (CLASS) is a research-based tool that measures the effectiveness of classroom interactions among teachers and students. These data measure three domains: teacher's social, emotional, and cognitive development and lead to better child outcomes.

Q: What happens during a CLASS observation?

A: The CLASS observer makes several key notes and observations of the interactions among teachers and students for periods of 15-20 minutes. Then, after several longer periods, they report the top 10 behaviors observed to their lead or the kindergarten and social workers by web observation system.

Q: Why are I being observed?

A: Research shows that CLASS measures interactions that predict child outcomes. So, observations support the entire process. The data might be reported to program leadership, supported by observations in part of planning or ongoing adult teacher development. CLASS also a program director or administrator to better understand the process with each who might use data from your observation.

Q: How should I prepare?

A: You may want to sit behind know that there will be a class in the classroom. Observers should not need to be sitting in a room. It's better to be visible, led by an observer, and to avoid taking the observation. The goal of the CLASS observation is to capture what the classroom is like on a typical day.

Q: How long do CLASS observations last?

A: Observations are made over classroom period about 15-20 minutes. They capture interactions across a variety of classroom experiences. Observations may be planned when observed or observed when you go.

Q: Who will be conducting my CLASS observation?

A: CLASS observations are conducted by trained CLASS observers. To become certified, observers must attend a rigorous 7-day training workshop on annual training sessions that they can use for CLASS through daily and monthly.

Q: How are the results of a CLASS observation used?

A: Observations identify the highly effective and less effective interactions in your classroom. With specific observations you can identify the changes in the classroom that make more for children. Data from an observation can also inform professional development needs. For you in the long run, the goal of a CLASS observation should be an individual experience for teachers.
