

New Holland Header Height Control

Introduction

The Header Height Control system is greatly affected by the other settings on the header. For this reason, it is critical to the correct operation of the Header Height Control that it be adjusted after the header is prepared for the crop conditions that exist in your location. To achieve this, it must be set up in the shop simulating these operating parameters, or in the field under actual operating conditions. The header must be lowered into the cutting position, with the proper amount of weight on the gauge wheels and with the cutting angle set.

Since the header tilt changes the header's center of gravity and cutting angle, adjustments to the header tilt will affect the deflection of the suspension springs, which in turn will affect the calibration of the height sensor. Make sure that the cutting angle is properly set.

Refer to the Operator's Manual. Ensure the header is level, the cutter bar is at a good height for most crops, and that the mounting points, restrainer chains and lift link bolts are set correctly. When you are satisfied that the header is physically set up, study these instructions, then install and calibrate the Header Height Control.

The header height control system uses different sensors for each make of combine, therefore the sensors you see in the illustrations in this manual may not appear to be the same as those that arrived in your kit.
