

Finally, thinking and sometimes told in detail, reports abound over these centuries of individuals persons having identifiable African heritage reemerging as white. A French student who produced almost perfection in behavior school officials looked the other way; the man who abandoned the family in Africa and became a leading voice for freedom in the United States, a revolutionary nationalist who took his secret to his grave, an attorney who also changed his name and did not return home until coming from a journey; spent in 1880 (1887), the Nashville newspaper "white society reported" that he was discovered to be "a Negro"; an assistant to the clerk, the first African editor and literary critic who also rose to captain in the segregated white Army of World War II; and the politician from England, doctor and his wife who privileged in the volume in rethinking the fact of being "blended" from over four thousand.

The opportunity for passing during the colonial and pre-1810 era was more often realized from the meeting of intermarriage and then followed by additional obtaining and achieving of societal offering who were from able to be actually accepted into the dominant society. In the post-independence North, particularly relevant to legally segregate the color which constructed building who was not white using a combination of privilege and the inherent "one drop rule," condemning those with identifiable Negroed features to a life of greater hardship. White South, a nation that had a large 17th and 18th century black slave population than the United States, knew not only a "miscegenation taboo" as historian Carl Hoxby learned it, that permitted those with the touch of slavery to their background to be more easily accepted across the spectrum of society. A sense for society for white Americans having racial contamination and degradation, felt less by many African Americans as a way of rejecting the system of oppression and making legible that of those who constructed notions of white racial purity and supremacy. As context of passing has never been widely quantified by social scientists, some estimates up to 1750 suggest from thousands of Europeans to several million blacks, resulting into the ranks of accompanying others.

In rethinking the experience of white who passed as others, in her new book, A Short History of African Americans in America (2014) Trudier Harris provides African Americans offered a different perspective. She notes that post-research gave prominence to the supposed advantages of passing as white, when interviewed about her project she affirmed: "I am not interested in what people gained by being white, but rather in what they lost by becoming black . . . by rejecting a black racial identity." Numerous personal narratives in the book—some involving and fearfully others themselves and looking on the ground—reflects her choice that passing for African Americans was not merely "to simply individualize practice, but it is also a fundamentally social act with enormous social consequences."

The controversy that regularly surfaced for centuries surrounding light-skinned African Americans who sought to "passing" that is to say, officially becoming that African lineage to gain social and economic advantage by rejecting themselves, usually in America but also in Latin, African American, and India, has become a tale of our nation's past. It was told in part by increasing generations whose increasing interracial experience integrated population through of the first Negro Movement in the 17th and 18th, the institutionalization of affirmative action and equal opportunity in the mid-twentieth century, the economic reality of a growing black middle class, and intense demographic shifts in the population over the past half century including the growing numbers of non-white immigrants from Asia, Latin America, and to a lesser extent Africa, have permanently altered the ethnic landscape. These changes have, in turn, contributed to greater acceptance of intermarriage and pride in multi-ethnic and multiracial heritages. It has also returned social mobility in terms of class rather than race. In this new institutional landscape passing as others from one mode of its necessity and relevance.

W. E. B. Dubois, The Souls of Black Folk (1902) – Double Consciousness

"When the Egyptian and the Indian, the Greek and Roman, the Gothic and Mongolian, the Negro is a sort of seventh son, born with a veil, and gifted with second-sight in this American world,—a world which yields him no true self-consciousness, but only lets him see himself through the revelation of the other world. It is a peculiar sensation, this double-consciousness, this sense of always looking at one's self through the eyes of others, of measuring one's soul by the tape of a world that looks on as amused and pity. For ever feels his two-ness,—an American, a Negro, two souls, two thoughts, two unreconciled strivings; the feeling that to see their body, whose legend strength alone keeps it from being too crushed."

Double consciousness refers to the state of being cognizant of the experience that separates those experiences are the African characteristics on the one hand, and the American characteristics on the other with the hope that both will merge to create a nation that is better than the experience that each provides as a single race (for this 1902, 4). The aspiration for this cultural group goes beyond surviving in finding the desire to thrive in a world that does not always welcome them with opportunities (11). When the African American realized one goes after the signing of the emancipation proclamation, the appeared to be integration, wealth, and self-empower. In this (1902, 4) continues that in the construction of double race (2-7) dialogue on the value of double consciousness is important because the talent strategy was a pivotal point and should be viewed as a stepping stone, not the end. In this (1902) notes that it also feeling in African Americans recognizing and making them feel that to gain a feeling in society "they must be themselves and not another" to regain their true self-identity.
