

Precise and Concise

Good writing is more than being grammatically correct or using the right punctuation. Writers must write in a way that readers can comprehend. That means writing precise and concise sentences and paragraphs. Here are some of the most common mistakes students make when writing information texts.

Make Writing Clear to Readers

- Eliminate unnecessary words.
- Don't use filler words (that, of, up).
- Use clear and easy to understand language.
Shorten wordy phrases.

Examples

The semester will last a period of four months.
The semester will last four months.

I stepped off of the stage.
I stepped off the stage.

It was a well-known fact there has been a vast proliferation of undesirable graffiti written on the walls adjacent to the boys' restroom as well as the walls nearby in the hallway.

There has been a lot of graffiti written on the walls next to the boys' restroom and hallway.

Here are some other mistakes writers make when they are not thinking about being clear and concise.

- Extra nouns:

Tonya wanted to be in the data processing field.
Tonya wanted to be in data processing.

- There is/There Are:

There are fourteen students in study hall today.
Fourteen students are in study hall today.

- Not using domain words:

The research report is about studying snakes.
The research report is about herpetology, the study of snakes.

How can you avoid making these common mistakes? Writing information or explanatory essays requires planning. For example, you should have a list of domain-words about the subject you are writing. When you complete a paragraph, read it aloud. Does it say what you want it to say? Read the section to someone. If they are unable to tell you what the paragraph means, then you can be sure it needs to be rewritten to be more precise. Look for extra words and phrases that repeat or are redundant. Remember to think of your audience. Who will be reading the essay? Be precise, concise, and use domain-specific vocabulary. Readers will appreciate the clarity in your writing!
