Abstract

The simplification of written texts is one way for second language learners to access the general message of authentic texts. This linguistic simplification may facilitate the process of learning for non-native speakers but, at the same time, it may seriously reduce their ability for language learning by producing a text that is more difficult to the learners. This study aimed to find out to what extent an intensively developed simplified version of a text is appropriately written in terms of lexical structure when compared to its original version. In this regard, the original and simplified versions of the novel “Gone with the Wind” were compared. The digitized pages of the original and simplified versions were entered into the software of WordSmith 4.0 for further analysis. The results revealed low percentage of similar words, content words, and key words in the simplified version as compared to the original one. In addition, the high density and low consistency ratios in the simplified version indicates its high compactness, which may decrease its pedagogical value for learning vocabulary and reading comprehension.

1. Introduction

In the field of second language (L2) materials development, there is, currently, a disposition on using the simplified and authentic reading texts as the means of language input for the L2 learners, especially, at the beginning and intermediate levels (Day & Hamilton, 1998). Most of the L2 reading texts at these levels still rely on simplified input, and a majority of material writers and L2 specialists give emphasis to the practical value of simplified texts (e.g., Johnson, 1982, 1983; Shook, 1992; Young, 1999; Richards (2001)), in this regard, remarks that authentic materials often include difficult language, unnecessary lexical items, and complicated language structures, which can reduce meaningful ways of responding by the learners and make them bewildered and frustrated (Wilkins, 1975). Through simplifying the lexical structure of authentic texts, these problems can be reduced (Nelson, 2005). Wilkerson (1978) notes that in order to simplify a text, the material writer should maintain its authenticity in the sense of learner response, while considering the conventions of a specific language field. Text simplification, in this way, aims to maximize the comprehension of written texts by simplifying their linguistic structure (Majumdar, 2006; Subbarathnam, 2003).

McLaughlin (1987) believes that of all the skills that the child must acquire, reading is the most complex and difficult one. According to Davies (1999) most of the problems of second language reading and reading comprehension are essentially decoding problems. So, many writers, teachers, and researchers do not confirm the use of authentic texts in the classrooms because they believe that it is difficult for L2 learners, especially at the beginning and intermediate levels, to process, at the same time, all the stages of linguistic input found in an authentic text (Lima, Davis, & Singleton, 1998). One solution to overcome the problems created by complex authentic texts is to simplify them according to the learner level (Nelson, 2005). As Petersen and Christodorf (2007) point out, text simplification is the process of transforming a text into an equivalent which is more understandable for a target user. They indicate that this simplification is beneficial for many groups of readers, such as language learners, elderly persons, and people with other special reading and comprehension necessities.

The present study is a new trend in this regard and attempts to analyze and compare the novel “Gone with the Wind” and its simplified version to determine whether the simplified version can take the place of the original version in second language teaching/learning situations. For this, the similarities and differences of the two versions were

Even the Devil Quotes Scripture Robyn J. Whitaker, 2023-05-11 We are meant to take the Bible seriously not literally from the Introduction In Even the Devil Quotes Scripture Robyn J Whitaker looks to the Bible as a guide to interpreting the Bible and her findings breathe new life into our understanding and use of Scripture As it turns out the uses of Scripture within Scripture are flexible open to frequent reinterpretation and rarely literal For instance Ezra and Nehemiah reinterpret laws about whether Jews can marry foreigners in the wake of the Babylonian exile Their contradiction of earlier traditions found in Deuteronomic law do not invalidate Scripture but rather represent its diverse applications for the prophets specific situations In the Gospel of Matthew Jesus presents a more demanding interpretation of Mosaic law in the Sermon on the Mount while in Mark's Gospel he all but ignores its prohibition of working on the Sabbath Yet the common ethos of the two gospels prioritizes compassion over legalism Ultimately Whitaker ascertains one definitive characteristic of inner biblical interpretation love After all the Old Testament passage most frequently quoted in the New Testament is Leviticus 19:18 Love thy neighbor Thus Whitaker proposes a hermeneutic of love a litmus test for the validity of a scriptural interpretation measured in charity Ideal for any devoted reader of the Bible Even the Devil Quotes Scripture opens our eyes to the Bible as a living loving gift of God's unfolding revelation
