Given the following description and business rules, draw an extended entity relationship diagram (EERD) in Crow's foot notation (Also indicate primary and foreign keys):

A group of companies wants to store detail of their employees. All employees have a unique employee number as well as a last name and name. If an employee is an inspector, then the date of certification and the renewal date for that certification should also be recorded in the database. Some employees support dependents. For each dependent a unique number, last name, first name and date of birth must be stored. Each employee works in a specific department. One department employs many employees. One division consists of many departments but one department belongs to exactly one division. One company consists of many divisions but one division belongs to exactly one company. Only the names of companies, divisions and departments need to be stored.
