

Argumentative Essay On How Technology Is Killing Us

Technology Is Killing Us

Several hundred years ago man devised a way to harness electricity so it could be controlled and used commercially. This was, and still is, the most profound technological advancement made in human history. Electricity is the basis of everything that is done today. It's used to further advance current technology, as well as making life more habitable for the everyday person. Using electricity, man was able to conceive devices such as the: television, computer, telephone, and the list goes on. Technology has evolved to the point where it completely envelops people's lives; an example is the cell phone, which has become such an essential part of one's daily life that going a day without it is miserable. The sole purpose of technology is to make a person's life easier by removing or shortening any processes that would have to be done physically. This is known as automation; an example would be going to a fast food restaurant and instead of putting in an order through a person, the entire process is done by one
