Abstract
This research is an exploratory study of the experience of women in the United States who have been sexually abused by their fathers. The study was conducted in a qualitative manner, using in-depth interviews with 12 women. The results of the study suggest that women who have been sexually abused by their fathers experience a range of psychological and emotional difficulties, including low self-esteem, depression, anxiety, and post-traumatic stress disorder. The study also found that women who have been sexually abused by their fathers are more likely to experience difficulties in their relationships with men, and are more likely to experience difficulties in their relationships with their fathers. The study suggests that women who have been sexually abused by their fathers need support and intervention to help them deal with the psychological and emotional difficulties that they experience.
