

ANSWERS - Critical Angle and Total Internal Reflection

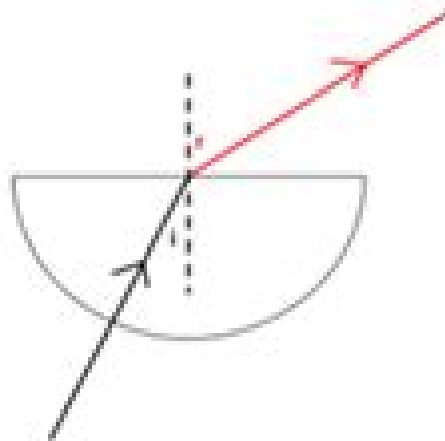

Complete the passages below by filling in the missing words and completing the diagrams and formulae:

swap	refraction	towards	reflective slower	reflection	confuse	away from
incidence	refractive	critical	faster

When light leaves a denser (and so slower) medium, it refracts away from the normal rather than towards it. Because of this, the angles of incidence and refraction effectively swap places in the formula for refractive index:

$$n = \frac{\sin r}{\sin i}$$

If the angle is small enough, it looks like this:

If the angle of incidence is exactly right, however, this will give an angle of refraction of exactly 90° :

The angle of incidence in this case is called the critical angle (c) of the material.
