- Abstract: State (surface) sequestration, where CO₂ is stored in the subsurface, is a promising option for reducing CO₂ emissions from power plants. However, the long-term stability of the stored CO₂ is a concern. This paper presents a study of the stability of CO₂ in a subsurface reservoir. The study is based on a numerical simulation of the CO₂ storage process. The simulation shows that the CO₂ is stable in the subsurface for a long period of time. The study also shows that the CO₂ storage process is a promising option for reducing CO₂ emissions from power plants.
