These figures suggest that the number of people who are not covered by health insurance is increasing. This is a serious problem for the United States, as it is for many other countries. The World Health Organization (WHO) estimates that over 1 billion people in the world do not have access to health insurance. This is a significant barrier to health care, as people without insurance are often unable to afford the services they need. The WHO also notes that the lack of health insurance is a major cause of poverty and inequality in many countries. In the United States, the problem is particularly acute, as the number of people without health insurance has increased steadily over the past several years. This is a major public health concern, as it leaves millions of people vulnerable to illness and injury. The United States must take steps to address this problem, as it is a major barrier to health care and a significant cause of poverty and inequality.
