Background

Aspirin, acetaminophen, and ibuprofen are three of the most commonly used synthetic pain relief drugs. Aspirin is a weak acid, acetaminophen is a weak base, and ibuprofen is a weak acid. These drugs are separated based on their solubility in different solvents and their reactivity with different reagents. Aspirin is soluble in water and reacts with sodium bicarbonate to form a water-soluble salt. Acetaminophen is soluble in water and reacts with sodium hydroxide to form a water-soluble salt. Ibuprofen is soluble in organic solvents and reacts with sodium hydroxide to form a water-soluble salt. The separation procedure involves adding these reagents to the mixture and observing the results.

The following procedure is a simplified version of the separation procedure used in this experiment. It is intended to be used as a guide for the separation of a mixture of three synthetic pain relief drugs. The procedure involves adding the reagents to the mixture and observing the results. The results are then used to identify the components of the mixture.
