This special anniversary publication also contains a collection of special reports on major initiatives in the health care industry. The special reports include a report on the impact of the health care industry on the environment, by members of the Environmental Protection Agency; a report on the impact of the health care industry on the economy, by members of the U.S. Department of Commerce; and a report on the impact of the health care industry on the workforce, by members of the U.S. Department of Labor.

The present study, however, focused both the operators' trouble identification and the operators' associated repair and response tasks on how they deal with engine control malfunctions of the components. The operators' fault diagnosis and repair skills are the focus of the present study. The authors would like to thank the 1000 participants from the previous experiments (see, for example, van der Helm, 1999).
