Children and Cross-Examination J R Spencer, Michael Lamb, 2012-06-01 In 2009 Stephen Barker was convicted of rape on the evidence of a little girl who was four and a half years old at the trial and about three and a half when first interviewed by the police The high point of the proceedings was the child's appearance as a live witness in order for Barker's counsel to attempt a cross examination This case focused attention on the need imposed by current English law for even tiny children to come to court for a live cross examination In 1989 the Pigot Committee proposed a scheme under which the whole of a young child's evidence including cross examination would be obtained out of court and in advance of trial In 1999 a provision designed to give effect to this was included in the Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act but it has not yet been brought into force The full Pigot proposal was implemented however in Western Australia and similar schemes operate in a number of European jurisdictions This book of essays examines a number of these schemes and argues the case for further reforms in the UK

essential and ecologically valid component in language assessments of children and adults for three key reasons 1 this competence is crucial for an individual s everyday functioning and academic and social life 2 it provides information about an individual s socio cognitive and linguistic abilities and 3 it is a versatile test of language skills at the levels of content form use and their integration The second focus is on comparing the results elicited via in person assessments and remote online assessments This Research Topic welcomes empirical articles discussing new evidence perspective and opinion papers on issues at the conceptual methodological interface and methods articles presenting approaches that can offer opportunities for remote testing of developmental discourse supported by recent technological advances Potential themes may include but are not limited to comparisons of remote versus in person testing modes using a within participants research design learner variables such as age gender language status monolingual multilingual and clinical status typically developing children and adults children and adults with clinical conditions such as developmental language disorder autism spectrum disorder which may affect the efficacy of remote testing linguistic variables such as the use of referential and relational devices and mental state language which may be subject to more variations when being assessed remotely new methods that offer opportunities for the remote testing of developmental and adult discourse supported by recent technological advances articles addressing the same research question within developmental narrative discourse but using different i e either online or offline research methods
