

Quality Control Interview Questions & Answers

Q18. What is RT & RRT in HPLC?

The amount of time it takes for the compound to pass through the column is the retention time (RT). The relative retention time (RRT) is the comparison of the RT of one compound to another.

Q19. Types of HPLC pumps?

There are 3 main types of HPLC pumps: Reciprocating pump, Displacement (or syringe) pump and Pneumatic (or constant pressure) pump.

Q20. What is trailing factor?

The tailing factor is a measure of peak tailing. It is defined as the distance from the front slope of the peak to the back slope divided by twice the distance from the centre line of the peak to the front slope, with all measurements made at 5% of the maximum peak height.

Q21. What are the different types of HPLC columns?

The different types of HPLC columns are normal phase, reverse phase, ion exchange and size exclusion columns.

Q22. What is good laboratory practice (GLP)?

Good laboratory practice contains a set of principles that provides a framework within which laboratory studies (activities) are planned, performed, monitored, recorded, reported and archived. GLP help assure regulatory authorities that the data submitted are a true reflection of the results obtained during the study and can therefore be confidence upon when making risk/safety assessment.

Good laboratory practice contains different principles which are designed to ensure and promote consistency, quality, safety, reliability and integrity of chemicals during non-clinical and laboratory testing.

Q23. What is working & reference standard?

A reference standard is the traceable, raw material standard (usually in crystallized form) that we dissolve and volumetrically dilute to make our working standard. The working standard is what we use to "do our work," and this information makes it traceable and is recorded in the preparation notebook.

A reference standard is prepared for use as the standard in an assay, identification, or purity test and should have a quality appropriate for its use.

Q24. Why is dissolution test required?

Dissolution tests are performed to establish drug (active pharmaceutical ingredient) release characteristics of solid oral products, such as tablets and capsules. The rationale for conducting these tests is that for a product to be therapeutically effective, the drug must be released from the product and should generally be dissolved in the fluid of the gastrointestinal (GI) tract. The API in solution form facilitates the absorption of the drug from the GI tract into the systemic (blood) circulation to reach its desired target (site of action) to exert its effect.

Q25. How dissolution test is performed?

The drug is placed within the medium in the vessels after it has reached sufficient temperature and then the dissolution apparatus is operated. Sample solutions collected from dissolution testing are commonly analysed by HPLC or ultraviolet-visible spectroscopy.
