

Queen Victoria Life and Reign (1818-1901)

Queen Victoria opened the new nation of a monarchy centred by the sovereignty of her royal union. She also played a key role for the Royal Family, representing it with the public through state duties. At just 40, Victoria had, however, a towering presence as a symbol of her Empire. She and her husband Albert and their nine children came to symbolise a new, confident age.

1. Victoria's father was born on 24 May 1817 to the Byrons of Kent, the father was the fourth son of George III and she was 18th in line to the throne. However, she had considerably more claim of her in the succession. So when her father died when she was eight months, her prospects of becoming queen were good. As a princess, Victoria was raised at Kensington Palace. She was educated by her governess, Barbara Fenton, who taught her languages, arithmetic, drawing and music. Her education was largely self-directed under the supervision of John Caprin - a servant of her former husband who was sent on parole.

2. Victoria's youth was dominated by strict rules known as the Kensington System. These rules included sharing a room with her mother and having no late sleep. The system was designed by John Caprin, who hoped to manipulate her to gain further power and influence. When Victoria was 13 she was taken on a tour of the Midlands as the Crown and her mother could share her office with the public. The princess found it embarrassing and became increasingly restless.

3. Victoria succeeded her uncle William IV, two weeks after her 18th birthday, her first request was at four o'clock, something started in her mind, then Victoria moved to Buckingham Palace making it her official royal residence in London. The larger meeting for all by calling her mother to her in future events. She also learned John Caprin the number who made her childhood miserable from her own experience. She also became the richest woman in the world after Parliament granted her an annuity of £381,000.

4. A crowd of 400,000 gathered on the streets of London to catch a glimpse of the Queen on her Coronation Day. She was crowned in Westminster Abbey. She wore robes of white lace and red velvet. The five-hour ceremony was a late start as the Duke of Wellington, who had presided over previous coronations, was in Victoria's seat handed through a the wrong system and the Archbishop of Canterbury found a ring on the wrong finger, which took her an hour to remove.

5. Victoria had to leave with her first cousin Prince Albert of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha when he visited Britain in 1840. As head of state she had to prepare for him. The couple were married the following year. Victoria went along with wedding dress and had several wedding sets. This started a new tradition among brides who in the past had worn their husband's best to the ceremony. The relationship was a passionate one and Victoria often found her temper with her new husband. Albert took on the role of 'moral tutor' to Victoria, which helped her but meant she relied more heavily on him. Victoria had pregnancy soon after her wedding and gave birth to her daughter Victoria nine months later. The Queen found children and cultural political inspirations. Despite this she had a close relationship with Albert over 20 years.

6. Victoria, with the assistance of Albert, created a newly visible constitutional monarchy to curb a growing nationalist movement in Britain. Victoria became patron of 150 institutions, including dozens of churches, while Albert supported the development of educational institutions. The couple used an old style to influence events such as wars, and created military medals to support the armed forces. Together they helped demonstrate that the Royal Family didn't have to hide.

7. Prince Albert fell ill and died of typhoid on September 4, 1861, at the age of 42. The Queen was inconsolable with grief and wore mourning for the rest of her life. Victoria withdrew from public life after Albert's death, but kept in touch with her contemporaries and continued to give audiences to ministers and official visitors. She decided that monuments to her late husband should be built across the country and England including the Albert Memorial. She became very close to John Brown, a servant at Balmoral Castle, even though her children resented him. Victoria was called 'Mrs Brown' in the press but despite this she refused to give up her friendships.

8. The Queen was frantic with worry after the war and her illness fell ill with typhoid in February 1871. A year after the founding of the French Third Republic, which had provided anti-monarchist feeling in Britain. When Edward recovered, the Queen used a carefully constructed screen to focus royal support. She got a public that fighting service and appeared to preside on the Buckingham Palace balcony. It marked the queen's gradual return to public life.

9. Victoria became the Empress of India in 1876, the monarchy and Empire closer together. She accepted the title on the advice of her advisers Prime Minister Benjamin Disraeli, whose political advice she relied on. The approval of his imperial policies, which established Britain as the most powerful nation in the world. Her popularity in Britain peaked in the last year of her reign as she was the inspiration of empire towards the end of her reign.

10. The Queen received letters from all over the world. In 1876, the year of the Queen's jubilee year, she promoted anti-Apartheid laws, to promote her personal teacher at Munich. Later increased Victoria's links and Indian affairs and encouraged her to carry the rule over 24 but Victoria was frustrated by India, the country she ruled but would never visit. Politicians and members of the royal household resented his position but despite this, Victoria gave him honours and letters in India and kept him with her on visits to the British Empire.

11. Victoria's jubilee inspired her subjects to mark the Queen's jubilee year. She promoted anti-Apartheid laws, to promote her personal teacher at Munich. Later increased Victoria's links and Indian affairs and encouraged her to carry the rule over 24 but Victoria was frustrated by India, the country she ruled but would never visit. Politicians and members of the royal household resented his position but despite this, Victoria gave him honours and letters in India and kept him with her on visits to the British Empire.

12. Victoria died on January 22, 1901, after weeks of ill health. Her son and heir Edward VII and the grandson Emperor Wilhelm II of Germany were at her bedside. The Queen laid out in an Empire that counted a quarter of the globe with 400 million subjects, but she never forgot the men who supported her. She requested that Albert's dressing gown and a plaster cast of his hand be placed in her coffin. She also asked for a lock of John Brown's hair and his pocket watch to end in her hand. Lady also left orders that David Laing be among the principal mourners at her funeral. She was an indestructible monarch who, even at the end, was about a going her own way.
