

Abstract: The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program on the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women. The study was a randomized, controlled trial. The subjects were 40 sedentary, middle-aged women who were randomly assigned to either a supervised walking program or a control group. The walking program consisted of 12 weeks of supervised walking, 3 times per week, for 30 minutes per session. The control group consisted of 20 women who did not participate in the walking program. The subjects were assessed at baseline and at 12 weeks for physical and psychological health. The physical health assessment included measures of body mass index (BMI), waist circumference, and blood pressure. The psychological health assessment included measures of self-esteem, anxiety, and depression. The results of the study showed that the walking program had a significant positive effect on the physical and psychological health of the subjects. The walking program resulted in a significant decrease in BMI, waist circumference, and blood pressure. The walking program also resulted in a significant increase in self-esteem and a significant decrease in anxiety and depression. The results of this study suggest that a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program can improve the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women.

Abstract: This study examined the effects of a 12-week, 100% bodyweight resistance training program on the strength and body composition of sedentary, middle-aged men. The program was designed to improve muscular strength and endurance, and to reduce body fat. The results showed that the program was effective in increasing muscle strength and endurance, and in reducing body fat. The program was also found to be safe and feasible for this population. The findings of this study suggest that a 12-week, 100% bodyweight resistance training program can be an effective means of improving strength and body composition in sedentary, middle-aged men.
