

- Determine who is responsible for implementing each step.
- Establish criteria for measuring progress and success for each step.
- Consider the resources and tools available to support the goal.
- Evaluate the success of previous goals and your current plan, modifying as necessary.

Evaluation

Once goals have been achieved, work with those who implemented them to evaluate their success. This evaluation should assess which strategies worked and which did not. Insights gained from the evaluation should be applied to other goals and shared with the president-elect and president-nominee, as applicable, as they begin to develop goals.

Motivating Volunteers

Once you have established your goals and developed a plan to achieve them, you must work to motivate your club leaders and committee chairs to follow the action plan. Because Rotarians are volunteers, what motivates them in their profession may not motivate them in Rotary. You must consider each club leader and member as an individual and address their motivational needs. The following are common motivators for volunteers:

- Belief that the goal will benefit the community and their Rotary club
- Fellowship opportunities
- Networking opportunities
- Belief that the goal can be achieved
- Assignments that use their expertise
- Due dates with consistent follow-up by the president or other members of the club leadership team
- Recognition of their efforts

Use these motivating factors to help encourage member commitment to Rotary and participation in club activities. Club activities that combine these motivating factors are particularly effective.

Awards

Awards often motivate volunteers. Rotary International and The Rotary Foundation offer awards and recognize outstanding service for Rotarians and Rotary clubs. For an overview of awards available through RI and The Rotary Foundation, see appendix 5.

Districts often develop their own awards to acknowledge outstanding achievement. Contact your governor or assistant governor to learn about awards available for individuals or clubs.

Individual clubs are also encouraged to develop their own awards to recognize excellence within the club and community.
