Table 10 of the Code of Federal Regulations (49 CFR) gave 44 negative policy examples with the operating institutions, applications approved/rejected, flight records, rankings, and awards. Originally, flight records were often shared only by a lack of essential information and different reference format and content for each of the different agencies. This changed with the acceptance of the Federal Aviation Administration (FAA) as a government agency for a 1981's Operating Handbook, which established a standardized format for all general aviation records and relevant flight records. The new 1981's Operating Handbook (FAA) is often used as proof of FAA's flight records (see the
