

Essay Outline Strategy

(High School Essay Writing Strategy)

Grade Level: High School 9 - 12

Purpose: As a pre-writing strategy, this is the traditional outline format that helps students organize ideas, clarify information and brainstorm additional information. This outline format is particularly useful for essay topics in the areas of English and social studies thematic essay requirements.

Research: Current research into the process of writing continues to point to the fact that students perform consistently better products when a pre-writing, brain-based strategy is used. Additionally, it is also noted that it is important for students to have choice in completing writing tasks (Collins, 2001). Therefore, students who use a whole essay pre-writing strategy should be given the opportunity to use either a linear, written format strategy or the same strategy in a graphic format. The strategy that follows includes both the linear format (attachment A) and the graphic representation of the same strategy (attachment B).

Method: Students should have reviewed the essay tasks and thoroughly read the background information and the 'Task' requirements. Two caveats should be considered. First, the outline, either linear or graphic, does not (and in fact should not) have to have 'complete' sentences. In other words, you can write out your notes in the sections, not complete sentences. Second, it is OK to skip around to a part that the student is competent in or has the knowledge 'ready to go'. In other words, if the student is ready to relate something that proves a thesis, have them write out on the paragraph sections and then go back to the beginning of the outline or graphic and complete sections from the beginning.

The teacher can introduce the strategy as follows:

- ✓ Have the students summarize the topic they are going to be writing about (author's life, World War I, imperialism, etc.), and develop that into an 'attention getter' statement. This is a statement that introduces the reader to the topic.
- ✓ Next, the thesis statement. This is what the student is proving in the essay. For example, 'World War I was the direct result of militarism, alliances, imperialism and nationalism'. Or, consider, 'The life of John Steinbeck greatly influenced his work'.
- ✓ At this point in the strategy, the students add to the outline the 'main points' that prove the thesis statement. These will eventually become topic sentences for the following paragraphs.
