

What we learned

Though similar themes came up in many of our conversations with Canadians, there were unique perspectives that may not have been uncovered if equity-deserving groups weren't included in this research. By sharing the results of this dialogue and amplifying diverse voices, we hope that AI development and application can be rooted in trust and better reflect the needs and values of more people.

In order to continue this work of bringing diverse voices and communities into AI initiatives, we suggest the following considerations and practices:

Bridge educational gaps for inclusive participation

Harness the power of lived experiences

Cultivate lasting connections

Build expertise together

of respondents who self-identified as part of a racialized group feel that AI is biased against themselves and their peers.

of respondents aged 12-17 expect their generation will have to fix problems left behind by the current usage of AI (These respondents received parental consent to take part.)

We look forward to continuing this dialogue in 2024 and beyond. Together, we can collaboratively design and implement an ethical and accessible AI ecosystem that prioritizes human values.
