

Term Paper Sample topics

The meaning and persistence of a single theme in the work of an individual artist: for example, if we were studying impressionism (but we're not), you might choose a theme like this: mothers and children in the work of May Cassatt

For a 20th century artist:

musical instruments in Picasso's cubist paintings and constructions;

Max Ernst's "autobiographical" Loplop series

Willem De Kooning's Women: Monsters, Gorgons or Pop Icons?

Vanquishing Death: Alice Aycock's Installation Art

Morimura Dresses Up: The Postmodern Self-Portrait

The Art of "Bad" Painting: Lisa Yuskavage and John Currin

Art about AIDS: Wojnarowicz and Gonzales-Torres

In this example, a single work of art is the focus of a paper:

Ann Hamilton's Biennale Pavilion, Venice, 1999

Your topic may be oriented more towards a comparison:

the nature of the human body in late 20th century art (choosing a limited number of artists whose work you might compare)

a comparison between Renoir's treatment of the mother and child subject and Mary Cassatt's (not relevant for our class but you get the idea)

a comparison between different media: the similarities between Alex Katz's paintings and Ann Beattie's short stories, and why the postmodern short story is the best way to analyze Katz's paintings

In another class, we're reading a book which proposes that a great deal of what happens in the 20th century consists of recycling. The example this author gives is the mirror, as used in the work of Robert Morris (a minimalist), Robert Smithson (an environmental/conceptual artist), and Jeff Koons (postmodern pop). Each of these artists uses real mirrors in his art but not in the same way, with the same reason or to the same effect. A "recycled" object or idea could be a very interesting subject for a paper.

Choosing your topic is an important part of the term paper: you need to choose something which interests you, which will allow you to do more than just summarize something you've read, and for which you can find non-internet resources. Contemporary artists (those who are still living) are often difficult because you can't find good sources to use, making them a better choice for a class in contemporary criticism, as opposed to a class in
