

Ten Keys to Successful Strategic Planning for Nonprofit and Foundation Leaders

Richard A. Mittenbuhl

Strategic planning has long been used as a tool for transforming and revitalizing corporations, government agencies and nonprofit organizations. Recently, however, skepticism about planning has been on the rise. Political and economic uncertainty is the norm and the pace of technological and social change has accelerated. There is some disillusionment with planning efforts that can't keep pace. "We did a plan five years ago and haven't looked at it since," is one common complaint. Or, "By the time we completed our plan, we were already carrying out all of its strategies."

But such comments miss the point. Rather than expose some fatal flaw in strategic planning, they reflect a basic misconception about the purpose and value of strategic planning and what it takes for a plan and the process to succeed. Indeed, the process can prove pointless and frustrating and the end product of dubious value when care isn't taken to set clear, realistic goals, define action steps explicitly, and elicit the views of major stakeholder groups.

Yet few tools are better suited to help address the staggering array of challenges brought about by a changing environment. A successful strategic planning process will examine and make informed projections about environmental realities to help an organization anticipate and respond to change by clarifying its mission and goals; targeting spending; and reshaping its programs, fundraising and other aspects of operations.

Strategic Thinking and Planning Daryl Fischer, Laura B. Roberts, 2018-10-05 Strategic Thinking and Planning Second Edition is volume four in the Museum Trustee Association's Templates for Trustees series. The book and customizable web-based templates feature tools that help boards to consider their options, identify their priorities, and plan their actions at this critical moment in a museum's life cycle. In addition to the manual and on-line website, purchasers have access to the ongoing assistance of MTA staff. This book and the accompanying templates model the kind of thinking that is required not only to create a strategic plan that is tailored to each institution but also to stay focused on the strategic aspects of governance while implementing that plan. Planning teams are introduced to exercises and tools that will help them focus on what's most important to the future of their institution.
