Abstract—The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the heart rate (HR) and energy expenditure (EE) of sedentary, middle-aged women. The subjects were randomly assigned to either a control group (CON) or an exercise group (EX). The EX group performed a 12-week training program consisting of three sessions per week of aerobic exercise. The HR and EE were measured at baseline and at the end of the 12-week training program. The EX group showed a significant decrease in HR and a significant increase in EE compared to the CON group. The results of this study suggest that a 12-week training program can effectively reduce HR and increase EE in sedentary, middle-aged women.

- Day and night temperatures that are longer than the standard atmospheric conditions will negatively affect the rate of soil moisture evaporation, especially during the night, that are not having the positive effect due to the heat of the forest.
- Increased moisture in the soil will negatively affect the soil fertility, as the water has a negative effect, the length of the season may be reduced depending on the soil moisture evaporation.
- The soil temperature will be negatively affected, which may change the process of nutrient absorption, leading to a decrease in the growth of the plant. The process of nutrient absorption will be reduced for these reasons of increased humidity, which has a negative impact on the soil (as a result).
