

How Genes Work

DNA Structure

The building blocks of DNA are nucleotides. Each nucleotide is made of a sugar, a phosphate group, and a nitrogenous base. The bases are adenine, thymine, cytosine, and guanine. Adenine and thymine are purines, and cytosine and guanine are pyrimidines. The bases pair up: adenine with thymine, and cytosine with guanine. This is called base pairing. The bases are held together by hydrogen bonds.

Each chromosome contains thousands of genes. A gene is a short stretch of DNA that codes for a specific protein. Proteins are the molecules that do most of the work in a cell. They are made of amino acids. The sequence of amino acids in a protein determines its shape and function.

Copying DNA

Before a cell divides, it must copy its DNA. This is called replication. The DNA double helix unwinds, and each strand serves as a template for a new strand. This is called semi-conservative replication.

Complementary base pairing

thymine cytosine guanine hydrogen bond
new strand synthesis

Making a Protein

Transcription
DNA is copied from the nucleus into the cytoplasm. This is called mRNA. The mRNA is then translated into a protein. This is called translation. The protein is then folded into its functional shape. This is called protein folding.

Translation
The mRNA is read in groups of three bases called codons. Each codon codes for a specific amino acid. The amino acids are then joined together to form a protein. This is called protein synthesis.
